Parkersburg, W. Va. ONE OF BILL NYE'S BEST. The Facile Humorist Attempts to Check Literary Decadence.

Sometimes a sad, homesick feeling comes over me when I compare the pre railing style of anecdote and school literature w th the old McGuffey brand so well known thirty years ago. To-day our juvenile literature, it seems to me, is so transparent, so easy to understand, that I am not surprised to learn that the rising generation shows signs of law-

Insing generation shows signs of law-lessness.

Boys to-day do not use the respectful language and large, luxuriant words that they did when Mr. McGuffey used to stand around and report their conversation for his justly celebrated school reader. It is disagreeable to think of, but it is none the less true, and for one I think we should face the facts.

I sak the careful student of school literature to compare the following selection, which I have written myself with great care and arranged with special reference to the matter of choice and difficult words, with the flippant and com-cult words, with the flippant and com-mon-place terms used in the average chool book of to-day:

One day as George Pillgarlic was going o his tasks, and while passing through the wood, he spied a tall man approach-ng in an opposite direction along the highway.

"Ah!" thought George, in a low, mel-low tone of voice, "whom have we here?"

"Good morning, my fine fellow," exclaimed the strateger, pleasantly, "Do you reside in this locality?"
"Indeed I do," retorted George, cheerfully, doffing his cap. "In yonder cottage, near the glen, my widowed mother and her thirteen children dwell with me."

the man, with a rising inflection.
"Extremely so," murmured the lad,
"and ob, sir, that is why my poor mother is a widow."

"And how did your papa die!" asked the man, as he thoughtfully stood on the other foot a while.
"Alas, sir." said George, as a large, hot tear stole down his pale cheek and fell with a loud report on the warty surface at his bare foot, "he was lost at sea in a bitter and. The man ship foundary tree." at his bare foot, "the was lost at us in a bitter gate. The go of ship foundered two years ago last Christmas, and father was foundered at the same time. No one knew of the loss of the ship until the next spring, and then it was too late." "And what is your age, my fine fel-w?" quoth the stranger. "If I live until next October," said the years of age."

"And who provides for your mother and her large family of children?" queris the man.

"Indeed, I do, sir," replied George, in a shrill tone. "I toil, oh, so hard, sir, for we are very, very poor, and since my eldest sister, Ann, was married, and brought her husband home to live with us, I have to toil more assiduously than heretofor."

heretofore."
"And by what means'do you obtain a livelihood?" exclaimed the man, in slowly measured and grammatical words.

"By digging wells, kind sir," replied
George, picking up a tired aut as he spoke and stroking it on the back. "I have a good education, and so I am ab to dig wells as well as any man. I do this daytimes and take in washing at night, In this way I am enabled barely to maintain our family in a precarious manner; but, oh, sir, should my other sisters marry I fear that some of my brother-in-laws would have to suffer."

"And do you not dread the deadly fire-damp?" asked the stranger, in an earnest tone.

"Not by a damp sight," answered George, with a low gurgling laugh, for he was a great wag.
"You are indeed a brave lad," exclaim-

The tramp who abused it, the devil who used it, the comp who got it when these two were gone, the make-up and foreman, the editor, poor men, each rubbed some grime off while they put a heap on. In, over and under, 'twas blacker then thunder, 'twas harder than poverty, 'twas rougher than sin i from the roller suspended, it never was bended, and it flapped on the wall like a banner of tin.
